The hot book everyone is talking about, Fifty Shades of Grey. Have you read it? Have you shared it? What do you think? I put off reading this book because I had another series I was engrossed with, and because when certain friends gush about how sexy and erotic and naughty the book is...I hesitate because these are not the most erotic women talking. And to be fair, erotic is hardly a term one thinks of when submersed in a life of self-titles such as taxi mom, soccer mom, laundress, etc.

Now that there are apparently many book-inspired items being merchandised I figured I'd better get reading and see what all the fuss is about. I giggle to know that some of my friends have read this and only hope it inspires them to be a bit more sexy. The book does have some toe curling moments and a few inspiring ideas.

Truly ladies...if you want the man to want you, you must exude a bit of ooh-la-la.

You don't have to borrow one of his neckties, but if that is your MO then by all means, go for it.

With the fourth of July holiday having come and gone, why not celebrate by adding some of your own fireworks? Perhaps a bit deeper neckline to your patio party outfit (I can attest to the fact that you do not need large tata's for deep a v-neck). Wear shoes with a slightly higher heel, like Kristina Kozak's comfy kitten heels. Practice a sultry eye look to unveil for a hot summer night. (Jennifer's Sultry Eye How-To Video.)

These ideas are not mind-blowing but the effort should get him to take notice. How does that song go?....."Shake it up". Maybe you can't come up with fifty shades of sexy, but try a handful and see how it goes and shake things up a bit ladies!
