

I'm Still Learning — Who Has Time to Blow-Dry?

SHARE TWEET

By Jennifer Hermon

May 17, 2012

We all have our share of those days, right?

I have a friend who has those days, and they are epic. I can't even tell you because it seems so far-fetched (like, the guy is installing the new windows while the basement is flooded and, oops, the dog just ate the chicks we got for Easter). She should write a book.

For me, my days are less drama filled and more like a "are you flippin' kidding me?" types. I don't panic because in my world the answer is always "they make something for that". Because they do. They are amazing and they supply me with crazy tools to get through the day.

Last week my hair dryer broke just as I started to blow dry my hair. I have no idea why I have metal hair clips in my beauty tool kit, but they came in handy for throwing in some quick pin curls and driving with the heater full blast to get the curls set in my hair.

I only had a handful of these clips so the rest of the time I was winding sections of hair around my fingers leaning in toward the heat vent.

Yes it's crazy but some days a girl just has to make it work (right Tim?). So now you have a silly tip for getting a bit of curl done while drying your hair in a most unconventional way. For those of you who ride the subway...eesh. I hope the bathroom at your office has a hand dryer rather than paper towels. And don't even try with those fancy new Dyson hand dryers. Trust me. You will have an epic one of those days.

See more from Jennifer on her spunky, knowledgeable, helpful blog Suburban Catwalk.
Photo was taken by Eric Reichbaum.

SHOP THE STORY

